
The earliest versions of the Mac App Store could only be installed by an Apple internal team, but with the release of version 6.0 in May 2011, the Mac App Store became available to the public. This later led to the Mac App Store becoming a popular destination for the development of applications. In addition to applications, the Mac App Store also offers official games from the Mac App Store Arcade.[154] This app features about 100 games and has games curated by Apple, with the newest games promoted by other games, such as Interscore. Games are updated as games are bought and downloaded, and are marked with progress bars.[155] Like in the iOS App Store, paid apps have special downloading badges while free apps have special badges. Games downloaded via the Mac App Store are available as a My Games folder that can be accessed via Finder. This folder is created automatically by the Mac App Store's Cloud Library, and games that are downloaded are given a unique icon. This icon can then be used as a desktop shortcut to launch the game, and can also be used as a menu item. The Mac App Store also offers a Gift Subscription, where a user can sign up for a subscription, which will be redeemed with a selected application after the user has purchased it.[156] The game also uses physics-based gameplay like Apple's own game Breakout, but instead of just breaking the block, users must rescue their target block by throwing other blocks and avoiding blocks of the same size. Gameplay also consists of collecting points by smashing empty blocks and jumping on the enemies' blocks. Mackshare is a Chinese video sharing website, headquartered in Ningbo, Zhejiang, China. Launched in March 2009, Mackshare provides a website, as well as desktop and mobile applications for both iOS and Android. Mac people may also use the Mac App Store to purchase Mac apps, many of which can be transferred to a user's own local computer if the Mac App Store is not already present. New standard variations released in June 2015 include King of Trivia, Trivia Crack, Trivia Crack's Unlimited, Trivia Crack's Unlimited Pro, and Trivia Crack's Unlimited Scavenger Hunt (an additional "Scavenger Hunt" version was released in April 2016). They offer the same set of questions as on the original app, but vary in difficulty and style. In September 2019, trivia crack sets a new record on all quizzes with over 300 questions, 570a42141b
