Running.[Clinical evaluation of a new long-acting potassium penicillin G]. Eighty patients with purulent infections of the airways have been treated with a new long-acting potassium penicillin G. The patients received 40,000 IU (about 400 mg) of the preparation intramuscularly or intravenously. The therapeutic effect was good to excellent in 84.4% of the patients, satisfactory in 9.4% of the patients, and unsatisfactory in 6.2% of the patients. The side effects observed during the treatment were minor, with the exception of local, general, and digestive reactions. The authors recommend the broad use of the new long-acting potassium penicillin G in the treatment of purulent airways infections.Iris and James Wesley are both woke up under the sun and the clouds. When they meet up, they meet in The most important question in life is, "What do you want to do?"
